Logo and colours

A first look at your new brand, rebuilt from the draft you sent through.

Nothing in here is final. I have kept the direction you chose and fixed the things that would have caused trouble later: making sure the words are dark enough to read comfortably, and rebuilding the artwork so it stays sharp at any size.

Have a read, and tell me what you would like changed. Once you are happy with the logo and the colours, they become the base for the website.

IN THIS PREVIEW

- 2 The logo, and where each version gets used
- 3 Aqua and light grey, and one change worth explaining
- 4 What I changed, and the four things I need from you

THE LOGO

Drawn as vector artwork, so it stays sharp from a browser tab to a shopfront sign.

Your logo, rebuilt

The file you sent was a picture. That works on screen, but it blurs when it is enlarged and it will not print cleanly. I have redrawn it as artwork that stays crisp at any size.

The lettering is now shapes rather than typed text, so it looks identical on every computer, and nobody needs a particular font installed to use it.

On dark backgrounds. A separate version for dark panels and photographs, so the grey half of the name never disappears. Swap the file rather than inverting the image.

COLOURS

Aqua and light grey, as you asked, built out from the two colours already in your draft.

Aqua and light grey

I have kept the aqua from your draft and built a small range around it, so there is a version for every job: a strong one for words and buttons, softer ones for backgrounds and panels.

Aqua

Deep #005B57	Main #1A847F	Mid #46A49E	Soft #80BFBA	Pale #A9D5D1	Tint #D6ECEA	Wash #E7F5F4

Light grey

One change worth explaining

In your draft the small grey line under the name sat too light against its background. For most businesses that is a minor thing. For you it is not. A good number of the people reading your site have low vision or find pale text hard going, and there is a published standard that sets the minimum.

So I darkened that grey and deepened the aqua by a single step. You can still see it is your palette. It just holds up now, and the same aqua is safe for buttons and links across the whole site.

WHAT CHANGED

Measured against the draft you sent.

Name sat off centre by 5% of the circle

Small grey text was too pale to pass

Ring vanished below 64 px

OVER TO YOU

Reply with anything you want changed. There is no cost to changing your mind at this stage.

What I changed, and why

The red lines mark the true centre. In your draft the name sits left of it, and low.

- The name was not centred in the circle. It sat slightly left, and slightly low.
- The small grey line beneath it was too pale to read comfortably.
- The thin ring around the circle disappeared at small sizes.
- The circle had a faint gradient, which does not print or embroider cleanly.
- The whole thing was a picture file, so it could not be enlarged without blurring.

What I need from you

- 1 The logo. Happy with it as it stands, or is there something you would like adjusted?
- 2 The colours. The aqua is one shade deeper than your draft, for the reason on page 3. Comfortable with that?
- 3 The browser tab. You asked for the name on its own, with no symbol, and I have stuck to that everywhere. A browser tab is the one place the full name cannot be read, so I have drawn a single M for it. Say the word if you would rather not.
- 4 The company name. Once ASIC confirms it, I will apply it across everything and update the domain registration.

Once you are happy, this becomes the base for the website: same colours, same type, same logo files. You own all of it.
